

One-sided argumentative essay

Is one's personality more important than his look?

Which is more crucial? One's look or personality? In my opinion, one's personality is far more significant.

The first reason why I think one's personality is more important is that no one can keep their beautiful face forever. Everyone will get old no matter how beautiful or handsome one is. Our face will change as we age. When we are old, no one will care about our looks because you will not be as physically attractive as we are when you are young. At that time, one's appearance is not important. However, our personality will continue to play a significant role no matter how old we are.

My second argument is that if you are a bad or evil person, you are bound to be hated by many people. Some people's looks are beautiful, but their heart may not be. For example, if a girl is beautiful, but she is very selfish, no one will want to befriend her. After chatting with such a person for some time, you will think her personality is not as beautiful, hence you will not want to chat with her or make friends with her anymore.

My last argument is that one will be more attractive if one possesses good personality traits, such as confidence and kindness. If you are a confident person, you will not care about how others look at you. You will just try your best or do what you need to do. In contrast, if you are beautiful or handsome but do not have any confidence, people soon realise that you are no different from other people. For instance, although Lady Gaga, the famous American singer, is not the prettiest girl in the world, many people are drawn to her confidence and beautiful singing. I believe that your personality, including your confidence, is really more important than your look. Beautiful looks will not attract people for a long time.

To summarise, one's personality is more important than his look because only your personality will follow you forever and if you are nice or friendly, you will make friends easily.
