

The First African – American President of U.S.

Barack Hussein Obama II, the 4th President of the United States, is the only president born outside the contiguous 48 states. He was born on August 4 in 1961. He is also a famous president around the world.

In 2009, he became the President of the United States successfully. Many citizens supported him when he ran for 44th President of the United States. After he became the President of the United States, he did great deeds for the United States. In December 2014, Obama had negotiated a restoration of relations with Cuba. After one year, he announced that formal diplomatic relations between Cuba and the United States would resume, and embassies would be opened in Washington and Havana. Then, Obama visited Havana for two days in March 2016 and became the first sitting U.S. President to arrive in Cuba. As he was the first U.S. President who visited Cuba, the citizens living in Cuba supported him and Obama became famous in Cuba.

Obama is also the first sitting U.S. President to speak in front of the African Union in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. He gave a speech to encourage the world to increase economic ties via investments and trade with the continent. He had also lauded the progress made in education, infrastructure, and economy. He then also criticized the lack of democracy and leaders who refused to step aside, discrimination against minorities and corruption. He suggested an intensified democratization and free trade to improve the quality of life for Africans. He was so brave and warm that he helped the Africans to have chance to improve their lives.

Obama once said, 'Change will not come if we wait for some other person or some other time. We are the ones we've been waiting for. We are the change that we seek.' Today, this famous quote has encouraged people to change if they want to be a better person.
