

Title: Active learning

When I was studying in school, my classmates rarely put up their hands and walked in front of the blackboard to answer questions. It was due to the fear of embarrassment and the teasing of others after answering the question wrongly. Thus, the reaction in our class used to be very passive.

The photo was taken years ago when I was paying a visit to a primary school in mainland China. The active reaction of a girl during the lesson impressed me a lot. Whenever the teacher asked a question. She took the initiative to raise her hand and walk to the blackboard in full confidence. Although the girl's answer was wrong, no one in the class teased her. The brave act of the girl encouraged others to be more responsive in the lesson. Looking back to my school days, I feel very ashamed of my passive reaction during the lessons since I have missed many chances to learn from my mistakes. This photo may appear to be ordinary, but it represents the importance of active learning.

Title: Unity is strength

From the ancient time up till now, people have been cooperating with others to complete tasks. Teamwork is an indispensable part of our life. I believe that unity brings strength to us. Therefore, this photo is very meaningful to me. It was taken last year when I joined an exchange programme jointly organized by my university and an overseas tertiary institute. The programme was about traveling to America to study with the local students there to explore science and technology. Although our nationalities and languages were different, we shared the same goal. We had to cooperate with each other to complete a group project. When we put our hands together to encourage ourselves, I took this photo. Not only is this photo a souvenir for this overseas experience, but also a symbol of teamwork and unity.
