

4D Cheung Wing Yan

A Speech

Good morning, Principal, teachers and fellow students,

On behalf of the Student's Union, I'd like to welcome all of you to our school. I'm sure we all want to achieve success and have an enjoyable school life, so this morning, I'd like to give you some advice.

To begin with, I'd like to talk about the significance of following school rules. Every country, every city and every family have their own set of rules. Why? Just because rules protect us against potential dangers. This concept applies to our school rules. For example, how will you think if every student in our school runs around and fight with each other without attending any lessons? You will feel that our school is chaotic, and you simply won't be willing to study there. Thus, school rules prevent us from getting hurt and enable to study in classrooms comfortably, learning various kinds of knowledge about languages, sciences and so on. We shall never consider school rules as a set of limitations imposed on us, but a set of systems allowing us to get the benefits we deserve like a quiet classroom.

Next, let's talk about interpersonal relationships. Never can we doubt the importance of getting good academic results, but it's also of prime importance that we learn how to get on with each other. Friends can bring us happiness and a sense of belonging to our school. In the coming school year, students can learn more about skills to maintain good interpersonal relationships in order that a harmonious school environment can be developed. For instance, we can comfort our classmates who feel blue after examinations. Last year, I was glad to see that the F.6 students encouraged each other and formed study groups to back one another up before the HKDSE, which is supposedly the most significant juncture in their secondary school life. Lastly, they all got satisfying results. It's not hard for us to see what we can actually do to our schoolmates to root them up and how these small deeds can bring positive effects to the others.

I sincerely hope that all of you will enjoy your new school life in our school. Shall we all spread the seeds of joy to every corner in our campus. When you feel down, don't forget the friend sitting by your side.

Thank you.